A fire is kept constantly burning in this stove, and around the firebed is a coil of the boiler The heat from the stove keeps the water in the pipes in constant circulation se that steam may be raised very quickly. The connection between this stove and the botter so arranged that when the engine goes out of the house the pines slip apart automatically without requiring any time Every morning the foreman of each company sends a report to the chief of his battation giving the mimber of men on duty, the number sick or injured, the condition of the apparatus and any parthe condition of the apparatus and any par-ticulars he may have to tel. The third of the battalion consolidates all these into one re-port and sends it to the chief. The chief con-solidates the ten battalion reports and sends the result to the commissioners, so that at

HOW THE MEN LIVE In the engine houses has to be seen to be properly appreciated These is always some thing to do In a corner of the engine-room is a telegraph instrument connecting with beadquarters, and through this orders and most ages are constantly passing. One man is selected every day to take charge of the engineroom and watch the days. This man attends to the telegraph instrument and answers messages. At 8 in the morning the time is sent by telegraph from headquarters to all the engine houses, so that every company has the same time. Then the roll is called the men all opens the circuit. The wheel revolves, and taps corresponding with the notches are gatomatically telegraphed to every engine house in the city, the whole operation from the time that the signal box was opened taking less than ten seconds. The Wonderful Work of the New York Fire Department. ENGINES ALWAYS BRADY.

Marvelous Economy of Time-What a Single Stroke of the Electric Beli can Accom-plish. New York Times

Like the police station-houses the engine houses are modeled after no particular plan One of the down town angine-houses close to the old postoffice, may be taken as a fair examthe old postoffice, may be taken as a fair example of them all. It is three stories high, with a basement, and affords room enough for all the of Twenty-Third street on the first slarm, and requirements, but with none to spare The machinery is all on the first floor, on a level with the street Directly in front of the big unteer department gave up the ghost All ordoor stands the engine, a little further back and on the other side of the large room is the day-light and with colored lanterns at night So well are those signals understood it is not hose carriage, technically known as 'the tender" Back of these, at the extreme real, are ginning to end of a fire Every man at a fire the stalls where the three horses are kept-two has his place and goes to it. Each company for the engine and one for the tender In the second story there are two rooms—the officers' room in front and the dormitory in the rear in one large room, is the family sitting-room, each man has his locker. A PIRE IS DISCOVERED For example, at Broadway and Fulton street It may first be seen by a policeman, or by a fireman on patrole duty, or by some citizen There is a fire alarm signal-box at the corner and the policeman has a key, so has the fireman; but if the fire is discovered by a citizen and the policeman is not in sight he goes to the box, and sees by the printed notice attached to it where the key is kept. Procuring the key he opens the door and pulls down the small brass handle directly in front of him Each signal box is known by its number, and by pulling down the handle the number is instantly and automatically telegraphed to the headquarters of the department, where noon every day the commissioners know just how many men they have on duty and every operators are always on duty. Suppose the thing in the department. number of the box to be 27 Two strokes. with a short pause, and then seven strokes more are tolled upon the bell in the operator's room. This does not send the signal to the engine-house, but only to the headquarters. The operator, without the delay of a second, reactes to a little cubinet in front of him in which are several hundred tiny drawers. Opening the drawer marked No. 27 he takes out a small brass wheel, with two notches on one side, and seven on the other He fits this wheel into a socket made to receive it and for thore are the notches, cut in brass, and the the bell must give just as many taps as there are notches. This signal goes to every engine house in the city, no matter where the fire is own as while it is in progress. The engine has to be washed and cleaned, and the tender, house in the city, no matter where the fire is own as while it is in progress. The engine has to be washed and cleaned, and the tender, it is to be washed and cleaned, and the tender, the lose hung up to dry, and now hose repled on the tender ready for the next fire. Near the rear of the building is an open tower running from ground to roof, in which the wet hese is hung to did yet. "Ah, Bornie, my child, I fear you will regret it. Can you not listen to the advice of one who is far better acquainted with the world and the world's people than your trusting self? If ron only would!" Listening to the auxious parental tone of the speaker, one would never imagine that he had once been Bernie Shaw's lover. Yet there was had stood in the ranks of the girl's admirors and had come to the front, too, side by side with handsome Victor Dudley.

But the latter, with his dark, fascinating face and nolished, suave manners, was far betjudge, whose years numbered almost forty. whose hair was thickly sprinkled with gray. Fancy, I cannot say love, because I do elieve that gay, careless Bernie Shaw could love at her age.

There are girls of eighteen who can love as well then as at twenty-five, whose perceptions are keen and whose judgment is mature, who look beneath the superficial surface of things and measure their true worth, but Bernie was This is why, I think, she refused worthy Judge Hathburn, and turned to young Victor Dudley. Then the former ceased his lover-like attentions and became her friend and counsellor, in which role Bernie liked him much

Victor Dudley had not found favor in the judge's eyes; he believed him to be a designing man of the world, of selfish, careless, and perhaps dissipated habits, and he was sorry that Bernie had favored him.

Bernie herself laughed at his misgivings and

"Oh, Judge Hathburn, will you ever cease those grim forebodings?" cried Bernie, "As if I didn't know my own mind! Shall I tell you what is the matter? You're projudiced. What has poor Victor done to deserve this "But, Bernie," continued the good man, "your acquaintance with Mr. Dudley is of short duration. You know little of him ex-

"That he is the best man in the world, and you are next." Bernie interrupted—"that is, when you don't put on such a doloful fare and say such disagreeable things. You see I am bound to have my own way, judge."

That was the way their disputes generally ended, and at last the judge gave up the contest. But his fears were there all the same, and when he bade Derenice good-bye on the morning of her departure for the city, where she was going to be married, there was a sus-pleious moisture in the grave, gray eyes and a remor in his tones "If you ever need a friend do not besitate to call upon me," he said.

"'A friend in need is a friend indeed," quoted Berenice, gaily, waving her Roman scarf at him as she drove away. "I'll remember Judge Hathburn."

Down a narrow side street, one summer day, at sunset, four men, bearing a heavy burden between them, sliently marolied and stopped at the door of a brick tonement.
"Go up and tell her, Jim." said one. "'Twill rather hard on her to go in andden like." A woman was coming down the stairs, but stopped short when she saw the little group. What is it?" she asked.

"Be you Mrs. Dudley?" queried the one call-"Yes." The pale face under the shabby straw hat grew still paler and the brown eyes dilated darkly. "Go on,go on. I am quite prepared:

in the northern and western parts of England. In the north, especially in the great Black the midlands and the south they seem to have disappeared. Many of these customs come within the category of superstitions. In the north, no child's nails are ever cut on a Sunday; no infant's pails are cut until it has attained the age of one year, but are bitten : the inside of a child's hands are never washed until three weeks after birth : infants, before they are carried down stairs, are always carried up stairs, in order to insure their course in the world unward: no child is shown itself in the glass, or its teething process will be painful; cake is always given to the first person met on the road to the christening; marriage should never be performed on a Saturday, but always, if possible, on a Wednesday; the person who sleeps first on the wedding night will die first, as will the person who kneels first at the marrisea caremony. In Cornwall, no miner whistles underground; a Cornish child born after midnight will see more of the world than ordinary folk, and Sunday is an especially lucky

ESTHETICS

The recent entrance into the American lecture field of a young man claiming to be an exponent of the science of the beautiful, with its allied conceptions and emotions, has aroused wide attention. His peculiar habits of dress and person; the studied manner in which he poses before his audiences, and the constant association of certain unpretending dowers with his conversation and appearance. both in public and private, have done much towards turning inquiry in the direction of proches have excited mainly the sense of the Indicrous in all of his audionces, and many inhonest conviction, or an attempt at gulling a too susceptible class of people, if he succeeds health. The beautiful is defined by him as the perfection of sensuous knowledge, and the ugly as that which struggles against this perfection With this view he first amployed the term esthetic to denote a theory of the beautiful. Katn and Hegel treat of poetry, music and the drama in their connection with the eathetic idea, and their systems are more elaborate than any preceding one, although Kant's is regarded as very defective and containing many inconsistencies. Goethe wrote several articles.

Diderot, Taine, and several other French writers deal with the subject to a greater or less extent in books and essays, and it is no ticeable that there is less of speculation in their theories than in the German systems of æsthetics. But Franz Hemsterhuis, a Dutch writer, has the clearest conception of what may be called resthetics, pure and simple, of any of the above writers. He speaks of the matter thus: "The soul, desiring immediate and complete knowledge, and being limited by its union with the senses, which are incapable of perfectly simultaneous action, strives to gain the greatest number of ideas in the shortest possible time. In proportion as this effort is successful the knowledge is attended with enjoyment. The highest measure of this degest changes wherever necessary and practicalight is given by beauty, wherefore it may be defined as that which affords the largest numher of ideas in the shortest possible time." might have been a good lawyer but he chose to de vote his active years to something else, and he is now too old to learn. Mr Coukling is unfit for the supreme bench or for any bench, because he is not a man of judicial temper. Everybody, friend and foe alike, know him to be an intense, red hot parti-san who never sees or can see more than cre-side of a question There was absolute accuracy in Curtis' description of him as a person who divided man kind into two classes—slaves and one mies buch a man may do good service in some places, but he is no more it for a judge than he is fit for a bank note no more it tor a judge than he is fit for a bank note engraver or a bunday school superintendent. This nomination is greasly unit, because it is a fingrant abuse of the appointing power to use the supreme bench to pension a broken down politician who has made himself to the last degree odious to the people. It he must be provided for at the public expense, it should be after the manner that he himself recommended. This is what he said about collector Robertson to Gardeld. Comments on Conkling's Nomination.

New York, Feb 24—Journal (Repn) says if the president fell obliged to do something for ex-Senator Conkling, it is perhaps best that it should have taken this shape. Conkling has all the ability need ful for office, although has may not in the estimation of people of this state deserve the distinction Criticism on Conkling's appointment will be that a gentleman who was so emphatically repudiated by the people should not have so soon been given so prominent official recognition by the president

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The immediate deficiency bill was considered and committee amendments were agreed to including items for subsistence and education of Indians, and $50,000 for necessary expenses of the Garfield and Burnalde funerals.

Beck objected to a $20,000 item for mileage of army officers and claimed certain trips by army officers had been taken for purely personal reasons and sometimes for purposes not entirely proper. He protested against payment of mileage to numerons officers now on route to the capital to attend the Garfield memorial services on Monday.

Allison replied if the sensiter's arrain muent had any force it had application only to the manuser of apending the money not to the propriety of voting it.

The amendment then provailed also one increasing an item for additional clock hire in the postofice from $75,000 to $180,000. The bill finally passed without objection.

After some contention between Bayard and Miller upon the claims of pragrity over the tariff commission and Chinese bills, the latter being supported by his colleague Farley, the motion by Miller to take up the Chinese bill provailed. Agga—35 navs—16.
